

High School Options - Preliminary Comparisons

*Raymond High School vs
Three Other High Schools*

Background

The Raymond School Board tasked the administration to investigate realistic alternatives to RHS for Raymond students, and to gather information to help them (and the community) compare those options. Aside from status quo at Raymond High School, three potential alternatives were identified:

Pinkerton Academy

Manchester Memorial High School

Sanborn Regional High School

It is very important to note that we have not entered into any formal agreements or negotiations with these schools. Any projected costs are very rough and preliminary.

Factors to Compare

The administration set out to compare RHS to the other options, not only in terms of projected costs but in relation to many other factors such as curricular and extracurricular opportunities, basic school demographics, special education programs, state assessment results and much more. The information was gathered collaboratively by:

Tina McCoy - Superintendent

Scott Riddell - Student Services Director

Mike Whaland - Curriculum Coordinator

Marjorie Whitmore - Business Administrator

RHS – Special Education Programs

Connections Program - The Connections Program works with our most fragile population. Due to the level of support that these 8 students need, every student has a one-to-one paraeducator and a variety of related services (Speech, OT, PT, Reading).

REAP (Raymond Experiential Alternative Program) - There are 12 students (7 students are part of special education) that participate in the programming. A major component is the adventure based counseling that happens throughout the course of the year. This is in place in order to reconnect them to the school and their education.

TLC (The Learning Center) - The Learning Center focuses on the specialized instruction for 53 students. All of these students are in need of very specific instruction that will allow them to access the curriculum like every other student.
